

Moon

Canadian company Simaudio has been building a range of outstanding audio electronics for more than 40 years. The amplifiers and digital devices started carrying the Moon brand name more than 20 years ago, but a common theme held from the first Sima integrated amplifier to the latest Moon audio electronics today; no nonsense design inside and out, using a short signal path with the minimum number of capacitors, no overall feedback, an oversized power supply, and amplifiers running in Class A for those vitally important first few watts of power output.

Experts in all aspects of audio electronics design, the company has a commanding reputation for its digital audio (it still makes two CD players, and has developed a powerful streaming platform in its own right), as a fine maker of phono stages, and a producer of some of the best integrated amps, preamps and power amps in the business!
